Advertising continues to make greater demands for accommodation. Every branch of the business shows a sure indication of continuing public confidence. For all this the publishers desire to make their acknowledg-

With Progress for a watchword, it is the intention to persevere in the line which has brought success. Endeavoring to be fair to all men and to all political parties, aiming to glean the news field for all that may appear in a reputable newspaper, the amount of the Intelligences is to add to the good name it has earned as a clean and reliable family newspaper advocating Reonplican principles.

When Mr. Oscar Wilde "first landed on our shore" there was a very perceptible His fame as a poser, an withete, and altogether a very uncommon-place young man had preceded him. He had disturbed the screnity of England, and we were envious to know what it was all about. We were willing to be disturbed, too, if at the te we could be amused. Mr. Wilde gave us lectures, a grotesque presence and some antics. We cared very little for his lectures, but the young man amused us for

Before he was ready to leave we were tired of him. Finally he sailed away for as ours, and he took some of our good money with him. He is not too iesthetie to know the value of a standard doliar. Now he returns and fires a Nihilist play at us. "Vera" is the name of the play, and it has just been brought out in New York. While the play was in rebearsal Mr. Wilde told a reporter in confidence that anything with his name to it would be "a go." Mr. Wilde is not a modest young

The New York newspapers have much to say of Mr. Wilde's play, and Mr. Wilde doesn't like what they say. The Tribune

Bayn:

The piece awarded the public curiosity by a display of several queer acones, picturesque at pome, but mostly ugly, and by the expension of a fanctiu, locales, highly-pepperer story of love, intrigue and politics, invested with Rishani accessority of far and dark-lanterns, and overlaid with battam gabble about freedom and the pueples-Of the dramatic power obsensation be making of distinct, rounded, contrastible parsons, Mr. Wilde given nowidoses in lap-poduction. Finally, the style tanougabat, is first fast some most of the first and as Mr. Wilde causes to be uttered about the try would martly have been acceptable evan in the tandd and shreking old Fourth-July or attors of thirty or forty years ago.

The Herald says, "the audience was bored to the verge of distraction." The Times

Mr. Wilde's play is in fact on energetic Mr. Wilde's play is, in fact, an energific tirade against tyrants and despots; it is full of long specores, in which the glory of liberty is eloquently described; each of the characters has six "presenting" to do, and each does it with extraordinary vigor; the play is, we may suggest, a kind of pup is from which Mr. Wilde inters his desinatory dictum upon freedom; and the rights of man. But an it may does not make a dramatic play, and Vera is not deamatic. Net there is constantly suggested in it a dramatic motive which is not shown conceledy.

The World says it is "obviously enough a play lor the market," which means that Mr. Wilds desires to hear the "well done" of the man in the box-office. The Sun jumps with both feet on Mr. Wilde and his
